The New York Tribune Now Runs a Union Office.

An Authorized Statement on the Part of Typographical Union No. 6.

It Is Claimed It Was Coincidental and No Design, That Brought It About at This Time-The Minneapolis Committee's Action Fully Defended.

NEW YORK, June 17 .- The differences that have so long existed between Editor Whitelaw Reid, who has been nominated for vice president, and Typograhical union No. 6, have been amicably settled, and Mr. Reid's newspaper, the Tribune, bas been made a union paper. William J. Brennan, ex-president of the union, has been appointed foreman of the Tribune, and will take charge of the composing room Monday. He was selected from a number of other prominent printers whose names were submitted to the representatives of the Tribune for the position

Mr. Brennan would have assumed charge of the composing-room many days ago had he not been absent with Although the Democracy can venture his colleagues, President John A. Kenney, Robert Costello, Thomas Hancock and Pierce J. Hurley, who went to Minneapolis to assure the republican managers that the differences between Mr. Reid and the union had been settled. Had Mr. Brennan supposed that he would be selected for the foremanship he would not have gone to Minne-

The delay in Mr. Brennan's taking room, and the doubt among union printers as to the truth of Chauncy M. Depew's statement to the convention that Mr. Reid's trouble with the union had been settled, have occasioned much comment in democratic newspapers. At President John R.
